On 20 July 2012, the “Meisterwerke” (Masterpieces) exhibition of German artist Cornelius Richter was launched at the Artgalerie at Schlosshotel Gabelhofen in Styria, Austria.

The solo exhibition brings together a selection of masterpieces by German painter and sculptor Cornelius Richter. As stated by a press release on 23 July 2012, the exhibition shows the spectacular quality of his work and represents a new chapter in Fine Arts and Art History as Cornelius Richter is so far the first to have managed to depict human semen on canvas in a visible, durable, and authentic way. This work, entitled EnergEthik des Lebens, was carried out over a canvas measuring two metres by two metres with the participation of around thirty people a few days before the exhibition was launched and.

Cornelius Richter was born in Gaermisch-Partenkirchen, Germany, in 1945. He studied art pedagogy in Augsburg and Fine Arts in Salzburg, Vienna and Munich, and worked with Expressionist artist Oskar Kokoschka. Later, he worked as an art teacher in several art institutions in Germany. In 1983, he set up a private Academy of Fine Arts in Regensburg in South Germany.

The exhibition at the Schlosshotel Gabelhofen will run until 12 September 2012.
